Short Description

After a brush with death and stupidity in 2005, "The Return" takes us back in 2006 on a solo ride from Sichuan, China through Tibet-Qinghai then into Xinjiang - home of the great Taklamakan desert and the Karakoram Highway leading us to our ultimate destination - Kashmir. All on 150cc bikes. Produced entirely by one man using simple video and still cameras; Carl Parker shares the story of these two adventures using photos, video, artwork, and music from Proximity Butterfly. Wanna go for a ride?

Description

"The use of drawings to fill in where the camera couldn't go was brilliant. But what made the film excellent was the personality of the narrator. His lack of formality made us feel like we were taking the trip with him, rather than just being onlookers." - Robert Pirsig author of Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance

After a tragic brush with death and stupidity in the previous year's attempt to reach Kashmir from Chengdu, we return to do it again. Packed with sights and sounds of Western China, "The Return" is more than a motorcycle travelogue or documentary.

As a one man production, direction and editing unit, Carl Parker, through use of photo, video, and artwork, brings us to places, cultures and experiences rarely ever seen by travelers in one of the most amazing parts of the world - Western China.

At over 4500m, stay the night with a family of Tibetan yak herders. At -130m we'll explore some of the ancient cities of the Silk Road and find out a little about how people have survived in the world's largest deserts for thousands of years. More than this though, there's a story to tell.

Where amazing land and mindscapes meet, learn about a rider pushed to the limits of his body and mind and what he went through to get there and come back again.
